ACCOUNTING MINOR PROGRAM

Accounting is the language of business. Communication within every department is achieved through the use of monetary terms and the language of accounting. Understanding accounting terms and procedures is important for the continuation and operation of a business. By analyzing financial statements, one can assess the financial position and performance of a business. In addition, the international financial reporting system and its applications for use in the international business environment are taught in the Accounting Minor Program. The analysis of financial statements is particularly important in investment and credit decisions. Learning accounting practices and procedures helps graduates obtain a position in any type of business.
